Iain Bulcraig is a qualified actuary and risk management leader who serves as Chief Risk Officer at SCOR Australia. His career spans over 25 years in life insurance across consulting, insurance, and reinsurance firms in Australia, UK and France. He has previously served as CFO at SCOR and worked in the company's Paris office, giving him international perspective on risk management and reinsurance operations. He has also worked in Sydney for TAL and EY in a range of life actuarial roles.

Iain is passionate about storytelling, mentoring, and enhancing risk culture within organizations. Beyond his executive responsibilities, he is a member of the Risk Management Practice Committee and a qualified ethics teacher, bringing ethics education to primary school children each week. This commitment to ethics extends throughout his professional work and mentoring approach.

He has been mentoring actuaries for many years and finds great enjoyment in the experience. Iain has witnessed mentees make genuine changes in their careers through regular interactions, including achieving qualification, changing jobs, having difficult conversations with managers, and negotiating remuneration. He values learning what people from different ages and backgrounds want in their careers and lives overall.

While Iain considers listening to be the key part of mentoring, he also appreciates delving into his memory banks to share stories when asked by mentees. For him, mentoring feels like one of the best things he can give back to the profession, and he will always make time for those seeking advice for their life as an actuary. His approach combines empathetic listening with practical wisdom drawn from diverse career experiences.
